

Doping in Organic Semiconductors and Solar Cells

Brian A. Gregg

National Renewable Energy Laboratory
15013 Denver West Pkwy. Golden, CO. 80401

Defect doping has a profound effect on semiconductor properties, yet it remains uncontrolled and poorly understood. We vary the doping level of poly(3-hexylthiophene) over a wide range and learn amongst other things that excitons are quenched entirely by mobile charge carriers, not by defects or bound charges.